AN APPEAL TO PRESIDENT BENIGNO SIMEON C. AQUINO III

For more than year now, congestion has been a persistent problem at the South Harbor and Manila International Container Terminal (MICT). By the turn of the year 2011, the condition never improved. Instead, it worsened. It became more apparent with the delay of delivery of shipments intended for the holiday season. Vessels cannot unload shipment on time for scarcity of space in the container yard.

The importer, freight forwarder, trucker, broker and other stakeholder's predicament is but a situation brought about by the storage of empty container vans at the South Harbor and MICT which were previously stored in private container yards. Plain as it may sound but it bears several implications on the release of shipment and cargoes.

Despite the inconvenience and loss incurred by importers, freight forwarders, truckers, brokers and other stakeholders caused by port congestion, charges, surcharges and penalties arbitrarily imposed upon and arbitrarily collected from them, that is, without consultation and hearing. Port operation and management is impressed with public service. Port users cannot be left at the mercy of port operators and shipping lines which are one in coming up with the charges of different names for the overlapping if not the same purpose such as storage, detention, electrical consumption for refrigerated cargoes, terminal handling, container deposit, container imbalance, port congestion surcharge, to name a few. One can be charged for failure to return a container van on time, which failure is due to lack of space in the container yard.

Port users can only wonder if the congestion is a result of inefficiency in management by the port operators? Or a scheme to generate more income in the guise of charges, surcharges and penalties? Is this not an artificial problem created solely for business end?

Whatever may be the obvious answer, one thing is clear. Despite the imposition of various charges, the problem of congestion remains.

At any rate, port users are not the singled out in the arena. Since the prevailing value of goods is the transaction value, the burden is ultimately passed on to consumers. In short, the cost of charges are added to the value of imported goods, whether raw materials or finished products.

It has far reaching effect to the economy of the country. Delay in the release of shipment and cargoes results in delay in the collection of revenue. Unloading of cargoes in other ports eventually results to loss of revenue. Cancellation of orders not only creates bad image to the international community but more importantly, loss of opportunity to do business locally, loss of employment and loss of income by people who depend on import-related business and activities.

Port users are rendered helpless in the present system of management and operation by port operators coupled by the dominance of shipping lines. There is no clear solution from the Philippines Ports Authority despite of several invitations to ventilate the issue concerned.

Mr. President, we are left with no recourse but to implore assistance. We echo our grievance in this medium in the hope that port congestion will be put to an end.

Sierra Madre folk doubt logging ban

LEONORA CORTI—Supporters of a movement to stop logging, triggered by logging companies' claims that they are illegal, doubt that a logging ban would actually protect the area's forests and the people who live there.

Logs floating in a river in Sierra Madre, Philippines, where logging companies claim to be illegal.

Sierra Madre is a province in the Cordillera region of Luzon, Philippines. It is known for its rich biodiversity and is home to many indigenous tribes. The province has been the subject of a long-standing debate over logging, with some groups advocating for a ban and others supporting it.

Supporters of the logging ban argue that the province's forests are a vital part of its culture and economy. They claim that logging companies are exploiting the area's resources and that a ban would protect the environment and the people who live there.

However, logging companies claim that they are legal and that their operations are essential for the province's economy. They argue that a logging ban would harm the people who rely on logging for their livelihoods.

The debate over logging in Sierra Madre continues, with supporters of the ban and logging companies each making their case. The issue remains a contentious one, with many people in the province expressing their doubts about the logging ban.

Comelec exec: Biliran poll fraud claim is an insult

By Ivan Ibarra

Commissioner of the National Election Commission (Comelec) said that a claim of election fraud in the recent local elections in Biliran is an insult to the commission and its staff.

The claim, which was made by a group of people in Biliran, was made public by a local news outlet. The group claimed that there was widespread fraud in the election, including the use of fake ballots and the manipulation of the counting process.

Comelec Commissioner said that the claim was an insult to the commission and its staff, who are dedicated to ensuring the integrity of the election process. He said that the commission has a strict protocol in place to prevent fraud and that any claim of fraud must be supported by evidence.

The group in Biliran, however, insists that their claim is true and that they have evidence to support it. They say that the election was unfair and that they want to see a new election held.

Can men try to feed on misery of Cotabato kidnap victim's kin

LEONORA CORTI—A group of men in Cotabato, Philippines, are trying to feed on the misery of the family of a kidnap victim. The group, which is known as the 'Cotabato Kidnap Victim's Family Support Group,' has been accused of exploiting the family's suffering for financial gain.

The group claims that they are helping the family by providing them with financial support and other resources. However, the family has accused them of exploiting their misery and of taking advantage of their situation.

The group's actions have caused a great deal of controversy and have led to a number of complaints being filed against them. The family has said that they are being harassed and that they are unable to live their lives in peace.

The group has denied the accusations and has said that they are simply trying to help the family. They claim that they are providing the family with the resources they need to survive and that they are not exploiting their misery.

The issue remains a contentious one, with supporters of the group and the family each making their case. The group's actions have caused a great deal of controversy and have led to a number of complaints being filed against them.

Farmers battle to save food

By John F. Collins and John F. Collins

Farmers in the Northeast are battling to save their food from being sent to the landfills. The farmers are protesting against the new federal food stamp program, which requires that food be sent to the landfills if it is not sold within a certain time frame. The farmers are arguing that the food is still good to eat and should be distributed to the needy instead of being thrown away.

The Life-Line Survey

Patients with a history of stroke are at an increased risk of developing a second stroke. The risk is highest in the first year after the first stroke, and then gradually decreases. However, the risk remains elevated for the rest of the patient's life. The risk of a second stroke is also increased in patients who have a transient ischaemic attack (TIA) or a minor stroke. The risk of a second stroke is also increased in patients who have a heart attack, heart failure, or atrial fibrillation. The risk of a second stroke is also increased in patients who have a blood clot in the leg (deep vein thrombosis) or a blood clot in the lung (pulmonary embolism). The risk of a second stroke is also increased in patients who have a history of smoking, high blood pressure, high cholesterol, or diabetes. The risk of a second stroke is also increased in patients who have a family history of stroke.

The award-winning director is the son of the famous actor Reginald Kinnear, and his father owned such noted London theatres as the Theatre Royal, Drury Lane.

For all that, it is his love for the story "The Merchant of Venice" which is the main reason for his choice of the play. "I agree it is a well-known play, but I think you will find that it is a timeless play. I can't remember the last time I saw it, but I think it is a timeless play," says the director.

He is also a fan of the play "The Merchant of Venice" and "The Merchant of Venice" and "The Merchant of Venice" and "The Merchant of Venice".

“We have a lot of responsibility for the way things are going. Right now, we’re not doing it right. I believe in climate change, and I believe in the science. Sessionistas not bothered...

BY JEFF LABRECQUE
 When it comes to the music business, there's one group of people who are often overlooked: session musicians. These are the pros who show up to a recording session and play whatever is needed to make the record sound like it was made in a million dollars. They are the unsung heroes of the music industry.

For session musicians, the music business is a constant state of flux. They are always looking for new opportunities and are often the first to be let go when a project is over. They are the backbone of the music industry, but they are often the least recognized.

"Leaders" respond to import rice price hike

YES, YOU'RE really surprised? Just as the other guys are often surprised at that the surprise is not just about the rising prices of commodities here and there. It's more of the sense that Lactum is used for being brought down to price as low that you can save as much as you want to save it already?

How low that others keep asking? Well, they want to be asked. The rice regulator has been on going...
